

Sainte-Beuve, Lowell, and the "Atlantic Monthly"

Citation

Mulhauser, Ruth. 1948. Sainte-Beuve, Lowell, and the "Atlantic Monthly". Harvard Library Bulletin II (1), Winter 1948: 126-127.

Permanent link

<https://nrs.harvard.edu/URN-3:HUL.INSTREPOS:37363277>

Terms of Use

This article was downloaded from Harvard University's DASH repository, and is made available under the terms and conditions applicable to Other Posted Material, as set forth at <http://nrs.harvard.edu/urn-3:HUL.InstRepos:dash.current.terms-of-use#LAA>

Share Your Story

The Harvard community has made this article openly available.
Please share how this access benefits you. Submit a story.

Accessibility

Sainte-Beuve, Lowell, and the Atlantic Monthly

IN the autograph files of the Harvard College Library is a fine example of a Sainte-Beuve manuscript. Sainte-Beuve's small condensed handwriting packs into eleven pages approximately five inches by eight, written only on the recto, a complete article on the poet Béranger. At the top of the first page are the words: 'Handwriting of Sainte-Beuve,' signed 'J. R. Lowell.' Certain explanations of French customs and geography make it clear that this article was not written to be read by a French public. Its first appearance, in February 1858, was, in fact, a translation by Lowell in the newly founded Atlantic Monthly. This date is still within the period in which no Atlantic articles carried a signature, so that the authorship could be guessed only by an astute reader, a scholar of Sainte-Beuve. Curiously enough, this article was never included, even in an appendix, with the critical works of Sainte-Beuve published in France.

Though it adds nothing new to Sainte-Beuve's judgment on Béranger set forth in seven articles published over a period of thirty-five years, yet the very date of the article's publication gives it a certain importance. The first two articles on Béranger (1832, 1833), it will be remembered, are quite laudatory; the third article (1850) still recognizes Béranger's merit but revokes some of the youthful enthusiasm of the first two; the 1857 piece is simply a necrology at Béranger's death. In 1861, however, Sainte-Beuve indicates that he has been accused of heresy since 1859 by the Béranger disciples.

The date 1858 assigned to the Harvard manuscript is interesting, therefore, because it shows Sainte-Beuve's very fair and temperate judgment just at the moment when Béranger's disciples were beginning to cry treason.

After its first publication in the Atlantic, the article was forgotten. Lowell gave the manuscript to Charles Eliot Norton, from whom it passed to form a part of the autograph collection of one of his sons, Dr Rupert Norton. On the latter's death, in 1914, his widow presented the collection to Harvard University. Finally, in 1929, Professor R. L. Hawkins transcribed and published the manuscript for the first time in the Revue d'histoire littéraire de la France (XXXVI, 427-438).

A minor point remains to be settled: Through whose agency was the article secured for the Atlantic? Among the founders and early contributors to the Atlantic the contacts with France were numerous, but a careful scrutiny of this group as well as of the group of Americans who knew Sainte-Beuve¹ reveals only five logical possibilities, chosen by date of contact and range of interests. While John Bigelow is the only one of the five not connected with the Atlantic, he did obtain from Sainte-Beuve two articles for the New York Evening Post, but he was not in Paris until 29 November 1858, or after the publication of the translation of the Harvard manuscript. Norton was in Paris and wrote Lowell on 20 June 1857 about the Atlantic and possible contributors. It would be easy to think that Norton approached Sainte-Beuve about writing for the new magazine, but, when asked, Professor Mahieu wrote that he does not believe Norton ever knew Sainte-Beuve. Although Lowell and Longfellow knew Sainte-Beuve, they were not in Paris at the time and their correspondence reveals no request. On the other hand, Francis H. Underwood, the 'literary man' of Phillips, Sampson and Co., and projector of the Atlantic, attempted as early as 1853 to found a literary magazine, and his correspondence with distinguished possible contributors seems to date from the same period. Bliss Perry, in an essay on Underwood for the fiftieth anniversary number of the Atlantic, says:

¹ Robert G. Mahieu, Sainte-Beuve aux Etats-Unis (Princeton, 1945), pp. 7-14.

One is tempted to quote all of Aldrich's inimitable notes to Underwood as well as letters from Sainte-Beuve and other foreign writers, and many a friendly line from Holmes and Whittier.²

Before giving this sentence of Perry's, Professor Mahieu asks: 'Pourquoi

² 'The Editor Who Was Never the Editor,' Atlantic Monthly, C (1907), 675.

Sainte-Beuve eut-il une correspondance suivie avec H. F. Underwood?'³ Subsequently he explains that the Underwood papers known to Perry cannot at present be traced. With all this, one may readily conjecture that it was Underwood who approached Sainte-Beuve on behalf of the new magazine of which he was 'the editor who was never the editor.' The request by mail would account for the manuscript's being folded to envelope size, and Underwood's agency would explain why Lowell as editor in title received the manuscript without seeming to solicit it in any way. It is a purely circumstantial theory, to be proved or vitiated, perhaps, when the publication of the Correspondance générale de Sainte-Beuve is completed or the Underwood letters are found again. Whatever the method of contact between Sainte-Beuve and the Atlantic, however, the manuscript is an interesting holograph from a great critic, and stands as the original of the most extensive article he did for America.

RUTH MULHAUSER

³ Mahieu, op. cit., p. 12.

Inter-Library Loans

THESE has been in existence for many years a well organized system of lending between libraries for the purpose of aiding individual research, and it may be said with assurance that the system has proved itself to be a great success. Not only does it fulfil its purpose, but it provides as well an outstanding example of cooperation among institutions.

Beginning in this country around 1880, the system has grown steadily in scope and importance, until to-day it is universal among our college and university libraries, and very common among libraries of other types as well. Certainly all college and university libraries must reckon with it as a regular part of library business, and must make some provision within the staff for

List of Contributors

- ELMER D. MERRILL, Arnold Professor of Botany, Harvard University
- ELIZABETH COOK, Girton College, University of Cambridge
- ANNA C. HOLT, Librarian of the Harvard University Schools of Medicine and Public Health Library
- HAMILTON VAUGHAN BAIL, Treasurer of the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
- LOUIS M. LYONS, Curator of the Nieman Fellowships, Harvard University
- KEYES D. METCALF, Professor of Bibliography, Director of the Harvard University Library, and Librarian of Harvard College
- THEODORE SPENCER, Boylston Professor of Rhetoric and Oratory, Harvard University
- GEORGE SHEBBURN, Professor of English, Harvard University
- HARRY LEVIN, Associate Professor of English, Harvard University
- RUTH MULHAUSER, Associate Professor of Romance Languages, Flora Stone Mather College of Western Reserve University
- ROBERT H. HAYNES, Assistant Librarian of the Harvard College Library in charge of the Reference and Circulation Division
- ROLAND H. MOODY, Keeper of the Collections, Harvard College Library