ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

By happenstance, I encountered this cache of manuscripts in the late 1980s at Houghton Library. I immediately recognized the connection to materials in the Huntington Library, particularly the poems of Bathsua Makin. But manuscripts take time. Without an Andrew Mellon Fellowship from the Huntington in the summer of 2000 and an unexpected gift of a sabbatical from administrative duties at Manhattan College in spring 2000, I would not have been able to pursue this survey. Houghton Library and the William Andrews Clark Library of UCLA were also most helpful in my study of this unusual manuscript. My thanks to those libraries and their most helpful staffs.

The Harvard Library Bulletin provided me with three incredibly astute readers to whom I owe thanks for their questions and corrections. I was also saved from a number of errors by the careful editing of Hepzibah Rapoport and Ophelia John. I owe them.

My thanks to Mary Robertson, former Curator of Medieval and British Historical Manuscripts at the Huntington Library, and to her successor, Vanessa Wilkie. Thanks to Claire Bowditch for taking time from her own research to check on some manuscripts at the Huntington. Without the unfailing kindness of Timothy Parrott, who transcribed and translated much of the Latin and Greek, I would be at a standstill. I am also grateful for the assistance of the poet and translator Ann McGarrell with the Italian sonnets of the Arcadian Academy.

I lack sufficient words of gratitude for Joshuah Eckhardt for his assistance in making this a more accurate document than it would have been without him. My debt is large.

Despite all the help I have received, all errors of commission and omission are mine.
Mary Ann O’Donnell is an adjunct professor in the Bedford Hills College Program of Marymount Manhattan College. She is professor emerita, English department, Manhattan College, and was also dean of the school of liberal arts there for seventeen years. She currently serves as a contributing editor for Scriblerian and on the editorial board of the new Cambridge University edition of the works of Aphra Behn. She has published extensively on Behn, including Aphra Behn: An Annotated Bibliography of Primary and Secondary Sources and “Bodleian MS. Firth c. 16: Aphra Behn’s Verse Miscellany” in English Manuscript Studies, 1100–1700 2(1990). She also co-edited Approaches to Teaching “Oroonoko”; Aphra Behn (1640–1689): Le Modèle Européen; and Aphra Behn (1640–689): Identity, Alterity, Ambiguity.