Appendix Four
Funds Designated in Full or Major Part for Preservation

The endowments listed below, either fully or in large part, are designated by the terms of their establishment for the preservation of library materials. The earliest, surprisingly, dates back to 1887, when the residuary bequest of Price Geenleaf created a fund which, “shall be applied to the maintenance and support of the Library of said College, by the purchase of books, the preservation and repair thereof.” In 1956, Carl T. Keller in his will also recognized the importance of preserving as well as buying books, but it has been in recent years, with the news about our disintegrating collection spreading abroad that individuals and foundations have particularly responded with essential financial support.

The Malloy-Rabinowitz Preservation Librarian, the first endowed position in the field (1986), propelled Harvard’s efforts forward in a significant way. Several years ago the Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences declared preservation a priority for the College and granted class credit to alumni for gifts for this purpose; current-use gifts have been received in addition to endowments. Plans are underway to include a preservation component in future fund-raising efforts.
